- Created during Kirchner's second stay in Davos in 1918
- Closely related to the painting Alpauftrieb (Kunstmuseum St. Gallen)
- Dense composition with dynamic lines

This print was created in the summer of 1918 during Kirchner's second stay at Stafelalp, which became a central place of work and residence for the artist. During this period, he increasingly turned his attention to motifs of the Alpine landscape and rural daily life.

The work is closely linked to the painting Alpauftrieb from 1918/19 (Gordon 539, Kunstmuseum St. Gallen) and takes up a motif that occupied Kirchner repeatedly during this period.

The woodcut occupies an important position within his printmaking oeuvre and was developed in parallel with his painting. A characteristic feature is the emphasised linearity with which Kirchner closely interweaves landscape, architecture, figures and animals. The dense composition and dynamic lines synthesise the scene into a cohesive whole, in which individual motifs are integrated into an overarching rhythmic structure.
